TURBOFIL FILLING LINE DELIVERS INCREASED THROUGHPUT AT REDUCED COST

SEPTEMBER 21, 2005, NEW YORK, NY – TurboFil Packaging Machines, LLC has completed the installation and start up of a new fully automated nail polish filling line for Art of Beauty (Cleveland, OH). This line includes a nail polish filling and assembly Monoblock for inserting BBs and filling the bottles. The bottles are fed to the filler automatically via an elevator system loaded by the operator. Once the bottles are filled, they are sent automatically to the capper which places and tightens the caps. The system then bottom-labels the bottles and sends them off to an accumulating table for boxing. Bottles are processed at a speed of around 50 pieces per minute. All of these functions can be managed by two operators who fill the elevator trays and unload the finished bottles from the accumulator at the end of the line.

This fully automated line can accommodate a variety of bottle and cap designs. It is easily adapted to filling other products in small bottles or vials (e.g. eye drops, breath drops, etc.).

Eli Uriel, General Manager of TurboFil commented, “We built this machine in stages for Art of Beauty. The company initially purchased the filling Monoblock to move away from manual filling. They then requested a fully automated system to be able to further reduce operating costs while simultaneously increasing production volumes.”

“This has turned out to be a very economical system that has rapidly paid off for us in terms of increasing our output with fewer operators,” said Art of Beauty President, Michael Reyzis, “TurboFil delivered a system that exceeded our expectations.”
